

Department of Investigation and Adjudication (DIA) Investigative Process

² During the formal investigation process, a matter may be dismissed or referred for restorative practices, an alternative path to resolution. However, most formal investigations conclude with an investigation report.

⁵ For cases involving student respondents, the sanctions are included in the completed investigation report, and if the sanctions involve suspension or expulsion, the respondent may request a live hearing, which is handled by DIA, following the same process outlined to the left.
